

INTRODUCTION

As an outpost of the British empire, the sleepy and deceptively beautiful Solomon Islands were almost unknown to the outside world at the beginning of the Pacific War. Yet from August 1942 the location witnessed one of the bloodiest and hard-fought military and naval campaigns of WWII, which at various junctions threatened to teeter in favour of either belligerent.

This second volume of Solomons Air War chronicles the air campaign for the entire month of October 1942, marking a period of peak intensity centred on the struggle for Guadalcanal, but which also bore witness to a major carrier engagement known to the Allies as the Battle of the Santa Cruz Islands.

Solomons Air War is a companion series to the existing South Pacific Air War volumes which chronicles the wider regional air campaign from the start of the Pacific War in December 1941 until the US invasion of Guadalcanal on 7 August 1942. On that date the air war splits into two distinct theatres from the Allied point of view. These are formally known as the South West Pacific Area (SWPA) and the South Pacific Area, but in practical terms they are the New Guinea and the Solomons theatres. Thus, the need to create two separate series, bound to each respective theatre.¹

However, readers should bear in mind that from the Japanese perspective there was only one theatre, with their naval and army commands at Rabaul fighting in New Guinea and the Solomons concurrently.

The full rationale for commencing this new series is explained by the authors in the introduction to Volume 1. In summary, it was felt a detailed chronicle of all aspects of the Solomons air campaign using primary source material from both the Allied and Japanese sides would provide a fresh, balanced and factual take on the subject. Indeed, a primary focus of both series is to align belligerents where possible, a task enabled by access to considerable Japanese primary source information made accessible only in recent years.

In this regard we hope that our attempts to evenly match the records from both sides brings new light and understanding to a truly complex air campaign fought so many years ago.

Michael Claringbould
Peter Ingman
Canberra
August 2023

¹ South Pacific Air War Volumes 4 & 5 continue with the chronicle of the New Guinea / SWPA theatre from 8 August until the end of December 1942. Additional companion volumes will continue the series into 1943.